Presentation Overview

Protecting corporate data and information, avoiding getting hacked, securing company trade secrets and confidential business information, and keeping the company's data safe from predators is one of the most important challenges that CEOs face today. Operational, technical, and legal issues are becoming increasingly pervasive throughout the security world, including the threat of data breaches and any resulting litigation, increased scrutiny from regulators, and negotiations with customers or vendors on security clauses in contracts.

On October 8, 2015, the CXO Forum will convene a panel of three nationally recognized cybersecurity experts to discuss the following key topics, among other things:

- The latest corporate security tools, technologies, techniques & protection and loss prevention processes;
- Steps that small and medium size companies can take to minimize the legal and business operational effects of a cyberattack or data breach, through the lens of approaching cybersecurity from a governance perspective;
- Categories of vulnerabilities most relevant to small and medium size businesses, as well as steps involved in creating an incident response plan in order to minimize legal exposure and disruption to business processes;
- Current legislative and regulatory environment for privacy and cybersecurity, including federal legislative proposals and recent court decisions relating to federal government enforcement.
